The Civil Service is far from perfect; and no one knows this better than the men and women who work in it. Their regular jobs are trying enough, without worrying about putting a narrative of Britain's history on the front of a government passport. But now, it seems, civil servants are not even allowed to have a private life; and the news that the Service's own barmy, booze-fuelled Christmas party has been cancelled last month by the Treasury may be the spark that finally lights the fuse. The rock in which Britain's civil servants are sitting may just have shattered this time. Now the Conservatives are in power, it seems no civil servant is to be trusted, even when they are just doing their day job. And then there are the resignations that have already started this morning: Hamid Karzai, the president of Afghanistan, has sacked him; Pat Rabbitte, the Minister for Finance, has resigned; The leader of the Ulster Unionist Party, Dr Alasdair McDonnell, has also resigned; Armando Delgado, the second highest-ranking official in the executive council of the Eurozone, has resigned; Linda Hogan, the Minister for 09e8f5149f
