What's New In NoVirusThanks NetShareMon?

NoVirusThanks NetShareMon is a straightforward utility designed to list all shared resources in a network for the purpose of identifying potential problems as well as collecting data for further analysis. Provides you with detailed information about the network resources The program comes with a clean and user-friendly interface that is designed as a list where you can preview all resources associated with your local network. In fact, the application displays each resource with detailed information, namely the server name, remote and local path names or the active connections, just to name a few. The data can be used to help network administrators manage the network resources more efficiently and detect any issues that come with credentials, permissions and user rights. At the same time, it can lend a hand with detecting configuration problems and hence, determine whether it is time to expand the company's network. Last, but not least important, the information can aid in establishing the overall network performance so that you can work on slow connections, latency and speed if necessary. A handy utility for identifying network issues and analysis In addition to the standard resources you are likely to find in the network, you will be happy to learn that the program also lists the hidden elements, an option that Windows cannot perform. Consequentially, you can also view folders, printers or files that contain sensitive information and, providing you have the password, access them to make sure everything is in order. Irrespective of the reason why you would like to know the shared resources in the network, be it for topographical analysis or perhaps to identify a potential issue, NoVirusThanks NetShareMon can come in handy. Key Features: - Lists all shared resources in the network - Displays all shared resources with detailed information (server name, path and share name) - List of hidden files - List of printers - List of shared files
