Starting this Thursday, teachers in the province can opt to either work for free or take a leave of absence without pay. "We hope to get everybody on the same page as far as who to talk to if their workplace doesn't have the required number of staff to run a class," said Arnold Smith, president of the Atlantic Region School Boards Association. "We will not tell them not to come to school," he added, "but we may say, 'If you do come, if you don't have the required staff, there is not much point in your coming because we are not going to be able to provide any quality education.'" School boards are gearing up to provide extra support for teachers, who are also dealing with a recent funding freeze from the provincial government. As the economy continues to recover, provincial funding for schools has not been restored. Having extra teacher staff on campus is the best way to keep teachers and students safe during non-storm related school closures, said Greg Neill, spokesman for the Association of School Administrators. "It's got to be as comprehensive as possible," he said. "If you can't provide the environment that's the safest space for students and teachers, then obviously it's not going to be a good day." Neal is expecting dozens of school boards, including the district where he teaches, to be closed Monday. "It's kind of easier when there is no snow," said Smith. "We just don't know which way it is going to go," he said. "Is it going to be like last year where the snow comes
