01219-07-12.sam . . 0.9. WinXP:Å regserver.xpg basic Disk-initiate:. 3.0.0.0.1 .The present invention relates to an organic electroluminescent device. The background of the invention will be described with reference to the following figures. FIG. 16 shows a schematic cross sectional view of a conventional organic electroluminescent device. An organic luminescent layer 3 is disposed between an anode 2 of ITO and a cathode 4 of MgAg. A hole injection layer 5a and a hole transport layer 5b are disposed between the anode 2 of ITO and the organic luminescent layer 3. An electron injection layer 5c and an electron transport layer 5d are disposed between the organic luminescent layer 3 and the cathode 4 of MgAg. In the organic luminescent layer 3, a hole is injected from the anode 2 of ITO. An electron is injected from the cathode 4 of MgAg. The electron and hole are recombined to generate excitons. By de-exciting these excitons, a light is generated. In particular, the organic luminescent layer 3 contains a hole injection and transport material, a light emitting material, a hole transport material, an electron injection and transport material, an electron transport material and others. A structure is disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Disclosure HEI No. 6-339814 in which a hole injection layer 5 is laminated as the hole transport layer 5b. This hole injection layer 5 is made of a material of which the forbidden band gap is about 1.8 eV and higher than that of the hole transport layer 5b. As a result, the hole injection layer 5 is transparent to holes. This hole injection layer 5 has a function of improving the hole injection property to the organic luminescent layer 3. However, such a hole injection layer 5 of high transparency to holes has a problem that it makes the hole transporting property lower. Furthermore, in this conventional organic electroluminescent device, the cathode 4 of MgAg is mainly composed of a material such as Mg. As a result, since electrons are also injected from the cathode 4 to the organic luminescent layer 3, in particular, an electron injection layer 5c containing magnesium as a principal component is generally used as the electron injection and
