“We have long been open about the importance of player data and our work to combine real-life data with the in-game experience. HyperMotion Technology takes this to a new level with a comprehensive snapshot of player movement in the real world, capturing actions, acceleration, deceleration and turning,” said Matt Lodge, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS. “Each player has a unique style of movement and the new system accurately models those individual movements to provide the most realistic-feeling artificial intelligence ever seen in FIFA.” A comparison between the player AI in FIFA 20 and FIFA 22 is shown below: 0 – Real-life Artificial Intelligence in FIFA 20 vs FIFA 22 AI 1 – Player movement in FIFA 20 vs FIFA 22 AI The FIFA 22 HyperMotion Technology tool will analyze over 20% of a real-world, complete football match. There are two tools for each player, one for creation, one for match analysis. In development, FIFA 22 will have 2.3 million animations - nearly four times the previous game. By combining real-world player animations with the in-game animations, 2.3 million new animations have been developed for FIFA 22. An example of how the Motion Capture data is used is an in-game sequence below: The player AI for each team in FIFA 22 has been improved and will be used in more complex situations, with data from motion capture sessions used to analyze the AI behaviour and adjust accordingly. A demo of the FIFA 22 AI has been released, which you can find here: In addition, FIFA Ultimate Team has received updates as well, with a new cardback pack, a new pack slot icon and icon in the store. These will be released in the coming weeks. Share this news article
